

Gerber Recall - Choking Hazard Causes Baby Food Recall

Gerber organic baby food recall Choking hazard has caused a Gerber baby food recall. FDA is aware and "concur," but no press release or any information as of this morning, Saturday, July 14, from Gerber or FDA on the subject baby food recall. AP Reports that Gerber "recalled all packages of its organic rice and organic oatmeal cereals Friday because of potential clumping of the baby food, which can pose a choking hazard. ... The company said a "limited quantity" of the cereals could contain lumps that do not dissolve in water or milk." Gerber recall was issued after the company said it has received "complaints of choking but no reports of injury." Gerber food recall is mainly about the organic cereals. While there is no announcement about this baby food recall from Gerber or FDA please see below the fact sheet about organic cereals from Gerber. Gerber® ORGANIC Cereals Fact Sheet*
